

Please consider whether federal regulations would weaken Indiana's existing Telephone Privacy laws before adopting a national standard. Our family received several unsolicited telemarketing calls per day before we signed up with the state no-call list. My mother-in-law and father-in-law would receive between 1 and 2 dozen calls every day before they signed up. Think about what you would be taking from those of us who have signed up with Indiana's no-call list: sanctity, freedom from harassment in our homes, and respite from a continual barrage of senseless, unwanted solicitations. Thank you for your considerations.
